

TRADITIONAL FIREPLACE MEDIA

Every Traditional fireplace can be set up with approved glass, stone, or wood media. Quantities are determined by the size of the fireplace and the type of media chosen within that fireplace. Mixing of the media types (i.e., glass and stones together) is acceptable if the quantities are adjusted to prevent overwhelming the burner-tray or elevated burner. To achieve a balance between the ideal appearance and operation the following guidelines have been set to create an optimum overall presentation. Stepping outside of these recommendations will lead to excess sooting, uneven gas flow, and degraded flame presentation.

IMPORTANT FOR ALL MEDIA TYPES:

- Avoid installing quantities that exceed the recommendations in the calculation guide.
- Do not use media to block or cover burner ports on your elevated log set.
- Keep all media within the fireplace burner-tray.
- Do not place media between the inner glass and external safety barrier.
- Media cannot be smaller than ¼"

GLASS, STONES, OR WOOD MEDIA OPTIONS

Every traditional fireplace uses an elevated log set as burners, lifting the flame presentation off the burner-tray, allowing for media placement to cover and fill the entire burner-tray helping to tie the base together with the elevated burners. The blue burner-tray area below is where to place any combination of glass, stones, or wood media.
